Wendy Awai-Dakroub is the owner and content creator for PINT SIZE GOURMETS, a family-friendly food and travel blog inspired by her two "kid-foodies," Leah and Jaffer. Her initial goal with the blog was to document the family's culinary world-schooling adventures which started in June 2014. Together, they travel to discover kid-friendly foods from around the world and write to educate parents about what to eat, where to eat and how to eat when traveling with kids abroad.

PINT SIZE GOURMETS has a wide-ranging readership, including visitors from the United States, Australia, Netherlands, UK, United Arab Emirates, India and beyond.

Wendy is the founder of Sumo Sushi & Bento, a successful Japanese restaurant food chain in the United Arab Emirates. She serves as the President of Sumo International, a franchise consultancy and private equity firm. Wendy writes and contributes to many different sites and blogs, is a Huffington Post and Honolulu Family contributor, focusing on the following topics: family travel, culinary adventures, and Hawaii. Along with her husband Youssef, they previously owned and operated The Art Loft, a community arts space, and Kan Zaman, Oahu's only Moroccan-Lebanese restaurant in downtown Honolulu.
